Grapes Packaging Process

Exporting grapes from India involves meticulous packaging to ensure the fruit's quality and safety during transit. Typically, grapes are packed in corrugated or solid fiberboard cartons, with a double pad or protective liner at the base to prevent damage. A polyethylene lining is often used to maintain freshness.

Pre-cooling: Grapes are cooled to the desired temperature before packing to maintain freshness.

Grading: Grapes are sorted based on size, color, and quality to meet export standards.

Packaging: Grapes are packed in cartons with protective liners and sealed to prevent contamination.

Labeling: Each carton is labeled with necessary information, including the exporter's details, destination, and handling instructions.

Cold Storage: Packaged grapes are stored in cold storage facilities to maintain the required temperature until shipment.
